Excerpt: . the mysterious colony in the far west. Mr. Bosanquet was down in person to conduct his distinguished companions--the eyes of the public---over the colony. The three men were making a light lunch. They had started from Paddington long before dawn, and had watched the slaves packed into the Grey Train. Now each of them was revelling in the brilliant air and sunshine. The windows of their room looked out over the bay and harbor of St. Ives. Ah, there she is! Bosanquet said suddenly. From behind the green hill, crowned with the ancient chapel of St. Ia, which juts out into the sea and forms one side of the harbor, a long black gunboat came slowly curving into the harbor. The three men watched it swing out and anchor in the tideway beyond the mole. Then a boat was lowered and pulled towards...

Reviews

Extensive information for book fans. It is written in basic words and never hard to understand. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.
