The zouaves have been for some time recruited among Frenchmen instead of among natives, as formerly. They are recruited usually in cities and generally, it is said, from base elements. They are said to have a bad reputation. They wear a moorish dress. The blue blouse and vest are ornamented with red pipings. The wide trousers are pleated round the girdle and arc; tucked into high white or gray-blue gaiters. The cap, called chechia, is of red woolen stuff. A white turban is wound around it for full dress. Up to 1870 the the color of this turban was green. The officers wear wide blouses with braid ornaments in the form of clover leaves. The Algerian rifles, called turcos, are recruited from among the natives. A term of service is five years. The uniform is similar to that of the zouaves, though of another color. A majority of the officers and noncommissioned officers consists of Frenchmen; the others are natives. The officers wear leather boots with soft tops, or slippers, for ordinary service. The foreign legion is composed of all foreigners who desire to serve in the French army. It is officered by Frenchmen. All kinds of men are enlisted without inquiry as to former life....
